RE: Baltimore applicant update
DATE: December 4, 2003

---

The following provides a brief update on the first round of contacts of potential applicants made in Baltimore.

Summary:

Initial contact has been made with 10 leads. Of, these four merit regular contact and support right now, though I will keep tabs on all leads in case there are changes. The four leaders of this group include 3 community groups – 2 are groups of parents with plans underway and one is a committee of a neighborhood organization. The neighborhood organization has expressed an interest in talking with an operator and has already sought preliminary input from Mosaica. The fourth possibility would involve faculty from a highly regarded school for children with language based learning disabilities, establishing a charter designed to meet this needs in the public system. An additional group, which I have not met with yet, would also be community based and a possible candidate to work with an operator.

Additional leads are being followed up on, such as city councilwoman Pugh's personal interest and that of her sorority. Contacts are being made with local community organizing groups, and church based groups to reach a wider community. I am targeting mid – late January for a community meeting to include briefing on charter law, city policy, application and timeline.

Meanwhile, I am having input into the application process, meeting with interested officials and individuals, seeking additional contacts, and gathering information to assist groups.

Recommendations:

- Maintain some contact with all of these groups, in accordance with initial assessment below.
  - Develop regular communication and support activities for:
    - Northeast
    - Pamela Jackson
    - Odyssey
    - Patterson Park
  - Maintain some contact with:
    - Canton
    - Coppin
    - Baltimore Curriculum Project
    - Brooklyn Community (around Maree Garnett Farring ES)
  - Assess:
    - Southwest Baltimore
  - Referred to High school program
    - Community Building in Partnership/Youthbuild

- Target meeting in mid to late January to brief interested community groups on state law, city policy and application process.

Policy comments and questions for this component of the project:

Timeline:

Given the city's timeline, it is extremely unlikely that a charter school will open in September 2004. However, at least one group is very interested in pushing this and appears to have the capacity to open a school, should they be successful in having an application accepted. It is very feasible that several worthy applications will be submitted and has preliminary approval by the City's Advisory board by the end of the summer. Has the possibility of a second year of this project been considered? Even with a focus on the immediate application process, longer term planning for work on a second round of applicants would be beneficial.

City network:

To build advocacy in the city, there should be networking of all types of charter schools, including New Schools, conversion and other. The types of schools that the state law allows include schools from scratch in a new facility and conversion of an existing school. Operators are to be non profit organizations, though clearly the opportunity to subcontract to an operator is provided. If an operator (for-profit or non-profit or institution such as Coppin) is to take on an existing school, no support is necessary from CER, though keeping informed of any developments in this area is advisable.

City open to range of proposals:

In working with the BCPSS staff on the application process, what is emerging is Janssen being open to all comers, and not setting priorities. I have discussed with her some of the potential applicants I have met and she seems to want the system and the advisory board to be open to the priorities that will come from the community. The key staff will not be recommending, for instance, that any priority be given to certain neighborhoods, or to K-8 and are also interested in neighborhood focused as well as city wide efforts. In the same way there is openness to different arrangements for governance and operation. The initial contacts yield two community based groups which are, as of now, pursuing establishment of 501c3 so that they can form the board and take on full operation of the school. Two others are candidates to work with an operator to implement their vision.

Budget/consultant:

As outreach continues and I start making arrangements for community meetings and technical assistance for groups, I would like to get a more specific idea of what the grant budget might provide. Laura Weeldreyer will be on maternity leave beginning in early January and will be available for some project work. As I try to assess how to make the most of this resource and help Laura plan her availability, it would helpful to understand the broader context of the grant budget and/or if resources will be available from elsewhere in CER's operations.
